The Unconventional Job Path

Purpose: No college degree and no experience are no longer the reason you cannot obtain a high-wage job or your dream career. From factory worker to private wealth management, learn the steps I took in my career to double my income.

Determine the skills you currently possess that your job reinforces, and how they can transfer to the next job. This is applicable to every job change. Be strategic in finding a job that uses a new skill in the career you ultimately want to be in.
My current skills were time management, leadership, efficiency, and collaboration. I knew my next job needed to handle money since I wanted to go into finance.

Battery factory worker → USPS Rural Carrier

Become efficient at the new skill while noting other developing skills.
USPS sells stamps, some people buying $400-$500 worth at a time. This gave me practice handling monetary transactions, planning, and customer service.
Better/higher paying positions become available as I carefully chose jobs that aligned with my goal.

USPS Rural Carrier → Personal Banker

Continue growing the skill that coordinates most with your ultimate goal. Being a Personal Banker let me handle large monetary transactions, onboard new customers, recommend financial products, and dive deeper into a financial understanding and grow a background in the career. This ultimately led me to obtaining a position in private wealth management, even when a college degree was preferred on the job listing.

Personal Banker → Private Wealth Management

This is a simplified layout of my path to show the possibilities. There are many other factors that got me to my current position, such as free online certifications, networking, resume building, salary negotiation, and many others. Your path will look different, and with more or less steps.
